The Fine Print

The Global Explorer portfolios are built and managed for long-term investors using a “core plus satellite” approach.

The “core” of each portfolio provides very broad diversification among global securities markets and consists of low-cost investments, such as index funds or exchange-traded funds (ETFs), that track domestic or international stock or bond markets. The core will represent between 50% and 100% of each portfolio.

“Satellites” may consist of actively managed investments like mutual funds, or passively managed, index-tracking investments like index funds or ETFs. The satellites will represent between 0% and 50% of each portfolio.

The goal of adding satellites is to benefit from an asset class, skilled manager, or specialized strategy that may improve returns, create a new source of diversification, or control risk

A baseline target asset allocation has been determined for each portfolio that defines the proportion of equity and fixed income as well as the proportion of US and international assets. These targets may be adjusted by plus or minus 5%.

The core of each portfolio will consist of ETFs or index funds that hold equity or fixed income securities. Satellites may hold securities that are not technically equity or fixed income securities. Examples include commodities or managed futures.

Such satellites will be classified as either “equity” or “fixed income” for purposes of the “Equity” and “Fixed Income” ranges shown on the preceding page. Classifications will be made based primarily on the volatility of the investments in question. For example, mutual funds or ETFs that are expected to have equity-like volatility will be included in the “Equity Range.” Funds or ETFs that are expected to have fixed income-like volatility will be included in the “Fixed Income Range.”

In the case of individual client portfolios, the ups and downs of the securities markets will affect the relative values of the individual investments in the portfolio over time. Portfolios are rebalanced annually. In extraordinary circumstances, portfolios may be rebalanced more or less frequently.
